PART ONE

I was born on a farm in Wisconsin. When I was five I was sent to school in St. Louis. I remember the first day clearly. I was alone, and when I entered, I noticed my teacher. My teacher's name was Mrs. M. and she was very kind. I was the only girl in the class. I was very shy and I did not talk much. I was very quiet and I did not play with the boys. I was very different from the other girls. I was very serious and I did not have any friends. I was very lonely and I did not know how to make friends. I was very sad and I did not know how to be happy. I was very different from the other girls. I was very serious and I did not have any friends. I was very lonely and I did not know how to make friends. I was very sad and I did not know how to be happy.

II

Joanna Russ (1924) was a girl from St. Louis. She was very different from the other girls. She was very serious and she did not have any friends. She was very lonely and she did not know how to make friends. She was very sad and she did not know how to be happy.

"I don't believe it," said Joanna Russ. She was very different from the other girls. She was very serious and she did not have any friends. She was very lonely and she did not know how to make friends. She was very sad and she did not know how to be happy.

"I don't believe it," repeated Joanna Russ, not knowing what they were talking about. "You'll never see me again."

WORKING APPARENTLY FROM NEWSPAPER OR BROADWAY, POLICEWOMAN VAN DER BEEK

"I don't believe it," said Joanna Russ. She was very different from the other girls. She was very serious and she did not have any friends. She was very lonely and she did not know how to make friends. She was very sad and she did not know how to be happy.

One of the corners of her eye was the only one that was open. She was very different from the other girls. She was very serious and she did not have any friends. She was very lonely and she did not know how to make friends. She was very sad and she did not know how to be happy.

"She, lady?" in a low, hoarse voice, he said.
